

It Might Be Today

SKIN TATT

Every Sunday we present a prophecy update. We show how news and trends in the world corroborate centuries-old prophecies you read in the Bible.

Ours is the generation that has seen the development of technologies that have made possible the fulfillment of the infamous 'mark of the beast.'

"What's that?," you ask. Two thousand years ago the apostle John saw that in the future, in the last days, all business, all commerce, your very identity, would be via some kind of 'mark' on your hand or forehead.

During the future seven-year Great Tribulation described in the Bible, that 'mark' will be used to track whether or not a person has sworn allegiance to the man we know as the antichrist.

Listen to this eerie article that was posted on Brietbart.com on August 11 titled, Electronic skin tattoo has medical, gaming, spy uses.¹

Excerpts:

A hair-thin electronic patch that adheres to the skin like a temporary tattoo could transform medical sensing, computer gaming, and even spy operations, according to a US study published Thursday.

The micro-electronics technology, called an epidermal electronic system (EES), was developed by an international team of researchers from the United States, China and Singapore, and is described in the journal Science.

"It's a technology that blurs the distinction between electronics and biology," said co-author John Rogers, a professor in materials science and engineering at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

"Our goal was to develop an electronic technology that could integrate with the skin in a way that is mechanically and physiologically invisible to the user."

The wireless device is nearly weightless and requires so little power it can fuel itself with miniature solar collectors or by picking up stray or transmitted electromagnetic radiation, the study said.

Less than 50-microns thick - slightly thinner than a human hair - the devices are able to adhere to the skin without glue or sticky material.

"Forces called van der Waals interactions dominate the adhesion at the molecular level, so the electronic tattoos adhere to the skin without any glues and stay in place for hours," said the study.

I'm not saying this newest advance is the mark of the beast. I'm not even saying that using it is wrong. The mark of the beast is swearing allegiance to the antichrist and it takes place during the Great Tribulation period.

I'm simply pointing out that the technology exists right now to implement something like John saw two thousand years ago. And the fact it is happening right now, taken in conjunction with other signs, tells me these are the last days before the coming of Jesus Christ.

Does anything need to happen before Jesus returns to resurrect and rapture the church? No. And that's why I like to end these updates by saying, Get ready, stay ready, and keep looking up. Ready or not, Jesus is coming!
